WHY WE PLAY

● ● ● For Development ● ● ●

Famous child development theorist, Lev Vygotsky suggested that play is not simply an activity, but the "source of development". And we believe that's true. When we prepare the environment for play, we're not just filling up the time, we're opening the doors to a flood of developmental opportunities for your child.

When we play a matching game, we're working on cognitive skills, as well as the social skills needed to play with peers. When we paint at the easel, we're building creativity and expression while also getting arms, hands, and fingers strong and adept for a variety of other tasks.

Playing with blocks is lots of fun, but it's also helping children with spatial reasoning, symbolic representation, collaborating with others. The list goes on and on. Wherever you see children playing, you'll see development and growth happening in real time.

Play isn't just an activity that fills the time. Play is the catalyst that ignites development in young children. That's why we choose to use play as the main teaching method in our classroom. Because when it comes to learning, play is both effective and efficient.

COLD AND WET WEATHER IS RIGHT AROUND THE CORNER--KEEP YOUR CHILD WARM THIS WINTER WITHOUT THE HASSLE OF SENDING COLD-WEATHER CLOTHING BACK AND FORTH TO SCHOOL!
